On Thursday the 27th of November 2008, 18 students obtained a Masters degree in Integrated Product Development (M.Sc. IPD) from the University of Malta. The Department of Industrial and Manufacturing Engineering would like to wish these students the best of luck for their ensuing careers. The M.Sc. IPD is aimed for engineers or scientists, who have recently graduated in either mechanical or electrical engineering or who have already achieved experience in industry. This postgraduate programme is intended to fortify skills and to maximize performance and success in the industry by integrating all the aspects of product development including product function and design, product materials and manufacturing, product use and environmental impact, product marketing and costing, entrepreneurship and business management.
